WHAT SHOULD I DO NEXT TO SECURE U.S. CITIZENSHIP FOR MY CHILD?

1. You may wish to contact your adoption service provider or legal representative to discuss your specific next steps.
2. To obtain an adoption that is considered final, you (and your spouse, if married) must adopt or readopt your child in a U.S. state court, or your foreign adoption must be recognized by your state of residence. Evidence of this might include a certificate of recognition of adoption from the state court or a copy of the state statute providing that the state recognizes all foreign adoptions. For more information about state laws on intercountry adoption, visit the Child Welfare Information Gateway at childwelfare.gov.
3. Your child will automatically acquire U.S. citizenship when they meet the conditions of INA 320 described above, including having an adoption this is considered final.
4. If you would like proof of your child's U.S. citizenship, you may file Form N-600, Application for Certificate of Citizenship, (www.uscis.gov/n-600) after your child meets all the conditions to acquire U.S. citizenship. A Certificate of Citizenship does not expire. You may also apply for a U.S. passport for your child with the Department of State.
