RE: ORGANIZATIONS CALL FOR DESIGNATION OF TEMPORARY PROTECTED STATUS FOR MALI

Dear President Biden, Secretary Mayorkas, and Secretary Blinken,

Under the leadership of African immigrant and Black-led community organizations, the undersigned 109 civil rights, immigrant rights, human rights, educational and grassroots organizations write to urge Secretary Mayorkas to review country conditions and designate Temporary Protected Status (TPS) for Mali for an initial 18-months. Mali is eligible for an immediate designation of TPS under INA § 244(b)(1)(C), due to ongoing armed conflict and extraordinary and temporary conditions. Due to these emergent circumstances, we additionally request the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) to issue Special Student Relief (SSR) benefits to Malian students.

Mali has been experiencing conflict, political and economic instability, unrest and a security crisis since the military coup in 2012.¹ Despite being engaged in a democratization process since 1991, political tensions have defeated the constitutional democratic system, resulting in a coup in 2012 with some forward progress before another coup in 2020 and 2021.² Widespread human rights violations and abuses against civilians, including war crimes, have been attributed to armed groups, ethnic militias, government security forces, and Russian mercenaries.^{3 4 5} After an economic recession in 2020, Mali's economic recovery in 2021 was weaker than initially projected and poverty continues to accelerate.⁶ The country is experiencing extreme poverty, food insecurity, with limited access to safe drinking water, healthcare and other necessary resources. Environmental challenges due to climate change have impacted the sustainable use of natural resources, resulting in desertification, mining, loss of biodiversity and water pollution.⁷ In 2022, of the 12.9 million people affected by the crisis, 6.3 million need humanitarian assistance,⁸ with over 70% of the displaced population relying on humanitarian aid in the absence of government resources.⁹

There is an unambiguous humanitarian crisis in Mali. Ongoing armed conflict and extraordinary and temporary country conditions place Malians at serious risk if returned. We strongly urge the Secretary and his counterparts in the administration to take necessary measures to protect Malian immigrants in the United States and provide an initial 18 month designation of TPS for Mali. In addition, we request that the designation is accompanied with Special Student Relief benefits, a timely Federal Register Notice (FRN), a 180-day registration period and a culturally relevant outreach campaign to the impacted community.

Temporary Protected Status and Special Student Relief

The Secretary of Homeland Security, after consultation with appropriate agencies of the U.S. Government, has the authority to designate a country for Temporary Protected Status (TPS) if the Secretary determines that the country conditions temporarily prevent their nationals from returning safely, or in certain circumstances, where the country is unable to handle the return of its nationals adequately,¹⁰ such as the case of Mali.

Under the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA),¹¹ the Secretary can designate a country for TPS if the country is experiencing ongoing armed conflict, natural disaster, or other extraordinary and temporary conditions. Congress intended for TPS to serve as a humanitarian protection, allowing beneficiaries of a designated country to live and work in the United States without fear of deportation to life threatening conditions. It is life saving, blanket protection, especially for those who are ineligible for or who have been denied asylum.

The Secretary's decision to designate TPS is a discretionary decision, and there is no judicial review of any determination with respect to the designation.¹²

The DHS can suspend certain regulatory requirements for F-1 students and issue Special Student Relief (SSR) benefits under emergent circumstances such as natural disasters, armed conflict and financial crises. F-1 students from countries experiencing such conditions face significant economic hardship.¹³ SSR allows students directly affected by the crises to apply for employment authorization to work off campus, be exempt from regular student employment requirements, and reduce their course loads if needed.

The country conditions analysis below will demonstrate that conditions in Mali merit TPS and SSR designations due to armed conflict and extraordinary and temporary conditions as a return to the country would pose a serious threat to the personal safety of Malians.

Need for designation of Temporary Protected Status for Mali

Mali is eligible for an immediate designation of TPS under INA § 244(b)(1)(C), due to ongoing armed conflict and other extraordinary and temporary conditions.

A. Background

Since the coup in 2012, armed extremist groups and governmental armed forces have terrorized populations in northern and central Mali.¹⁴ ¹⁵ The conflict began with a growing separatist insurgency in the country's north. The insurgents were armed with weapons flowing from nearby Libya following that country's 2011 civil war.¹⁶ The government's ineffectiveness and corruption in handling the conflict in the north and center of the country led to large scale civilian protests. The military overthrew the government, leaving a vacuum that was exploited by extremist groups linked to al-Qaeda and the self-proclaimed Islamic State. Other rebel and armed groups seized on the chaos of the Tuareg insurgency, and violence ensued. The effects of the civil war, the coup, conflict, and violent extremism has destabilized Mali and the Sahel region in West Africa.

a. Ongoing Armed Conflict

Despite signing the 2015 Algiers Accord for Peace and Reconciliation in Mali (Algiers Accord)¹⁷, signatory armed groups have committed serious human rights abuses.¹⁸ Islamist militant groups that were not party to a 2015 peace agreement continue to carry out acts of violence against civilians in the northern and central regions.¹⁹ The Group for the Support of Islam and Muslims (GSIM) and the Islamic State in the Greater Sahara (ISGS) committed war crimes and other abuses against civilians.²⁰

Ethnic militias committed serious human rights abuses that include summary executions, torture, the recruitment and use of child soldiers, destruction of homes and food stores, and the burning of entire villages.²¹ Terrorist groups kidnapped and killed civilians, including humanitarian workers, military and peacekeeping forces. The UN secretary-general documented that as of August 26, 2021, a total of 871 attacks against civilians resulted in the death of 484 civilians, 385 injuries, and 383 abductions. The reports also mentioned 1,556 human rights abuses, including 65 extrajudicial killings, 73 cases of torture, and 444 abductions and or involuntary or enforced disappearances.²²

More recently, Russian mercenaries were deployed to Mali by the Russian-backed private military contractor, Wagner Group.²³ According to U.S. military officials focused on Africa, between 800 and 1,000 mercenaries are now working in Mali.²⁴ The Wagner Group is a Russian security organization targeted by U.S. sanctions that has been widely accused of war crimes.²⁵ Malian armed forces and Russian soldiers, identified as “white soldiers”, have conducted mass executions in violation of international humanitarian law. At least 300 people are believed to have been killed in Moura.²⁶

The dangerous conditions in the country have led to widespread displacement, with registrations at a refugee camp near the border having quadrupled, according to the U.N. refugee agency.²⁷ An estimated 401,736 civilians were internally displaced at the end of 2021, with more than half of the displaced population reporting armed conflict and communal tensions as the reason for displacement. As of 31 October 2021, there were 158,958 Malian refugees in neighboring countries.²⁸

The ongoing armed conflict, the persistence of violence and human rights violations and abuses perpetrated by State and non-State actors, and targeted and indiscriminate attacks on the civilian population, make the safe return of Malians impossible.

b. Political Instability

Since 2020, the Malian government has undergone rapid and unstable transitions. In August 2020, military officers overthrew President Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta. The National Assembly was dissolved by former president Keita following the coup d'état. Retired colonel major Bah N'Daw was sworn in as president of a transition government, and one of the coup leaders, Colonel Assimi Goita, was sworn in as transition government vice president. N'Daw named former minister of foreign affairs Moctar

Ouane as prime minister.²⁹ In May 2021, after the government announced a new cabinet that excluded two key military leaders, another coup took place: the military arrested both N'Daou and Prime Minister Moctar Ouane, and Goïta declared himself transitional president.³⁰

In September 2021, transitional authorities announced the creation of a single election management body, the Independent Election Management Authority (AIGE). However, two months later, the transitional government postponed elections that had been scheduled for February 2022. In response, the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS), which had been pressing for a return to elected civilian rule, imposed economic and travel sanctions on members of the transitional authority. In December, the Malian leadership nevertheless proposed further extending the transition period and suspending elections for up to five years.

In June 2022, the mandate of the United Nations' peacekeeping mission in Mali was extended for another year until 30 June 2023 due to the delayed return to civilian rule, deteriorating security, and the dire humanitarian and human rights situation in Mali.³¹ "While the challenges in Mali are numerous and complex, they are far from being insurmountable," said El-Ghassim Wane, Special Representative of the Secretary-General and Head of the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali (MINUSMA). The Council decided to retain its current troop strength of 13,289 military personnel and 1,920 police personnel.³² The military-led Malian government has since ordered a suspension of U.N. peacekeeping mission rotations in the country.³³ The withdrawal of French troops involved in Operation Barkhane over the next few months could further destabilize the region.³⁴

The United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) has projected that for 2022, that the persistence of State absence, rampant impunity, and widespread armed violence will continue to generate multiple and protracted displacements, accentuating the civilian population's vulnerabilities and increasing the risk of community tensions.³⁵

c. Other Temporary and Extraordinary Conditions

According to OCHA, the humanitarian situation remains precarious for the almost 6 million people in need of assistance due to the immediate, multidimensional effect of conflict and violence. Economic growth prospects for 2022 have been undermined by the economic sanctions, regional food insecurity, and the war in Ukraine.³⁶

As of Fiscal year 2021, the U.S. Government has provided Mali $83,026,077 in humanitarian assistance. The extreme poverty rate in 2019 was 42.3%, as a result of outstanding agricultural output since 2014. The 2020 health, security, social, and political crises led to a 5% increase in poverty.

Approximately 70 percent of displaced households in Mali rely on humanitarian assistance to meet their food needs, according to the International Organization for Migration (IOM). Food shortages affected 1.3 million people during the lean season (June –August) in 2020, an increase of more than 200% compared to the same period in 2019. In 2020, severe flooding throughout Mali in July and August led to significant crop losses, where flooding inundated extensive areas of cultivated land, causing some households to lose the majority of their annual agricultural production.³⁷ Mali ranked 160th out of 180 countries in the environmental performance index (EPI).

The ongoing armed conflict has exacerbated the severity of the extraordinary and temporary conditions in Mali currently.

Designation of TPS is in United States' National Interest

U.S.-Mali relations have been strong for decades and have been based on shared goals of improving stability and reducing poverty through economic growth. The U.S. State Department's Bureau of African Affairs has stated that "the United States is committed to international efforts to help Mali restore peace and stability throughout its territory following the 2020 coup d'état, and the loss of large swaths of the country's territory to violent extremist groups."³⁸ In June, 2022, the State Department urged the Malian transition government to make sustained and tangible action toward holding elections, in light of the announcement by Mali's transition government of a 24-month transition timetable starting in March 2022.³⁹

U.S. foreign assistance continues to support the Malian people. The U.S. State Department has recognized the ongoing armed conflict, human rights abuses, and humanitarian crisis in Mali in its annual human rights report consistently since the conflict began. Its most recent 2021 report specifically highlights the conditions that put civilians in grave danger. U.S. bilateral foreign assistance to Mali's development totaled more than $134 million in FY 2019 and over $146 million in FY 2020. More than $133 million in bilateral foreign assistance was officially requested for FY 2021.

The U.S. government must do everything it can to support Malian nationals in the United States until conditions in Mali improve. A new TPS designation would enable Malian nationals currently residing in the United States to file initial applications for TPS, obtain work permits, and if approved, receive temporary protection from deportation. An announcement of SSR will have a significant impact on Malian students who can continue their education in the United States uninterrupted by the emergent crises. TPS and SSR were meant to serve as acute humanitarian protection for those who cannot return to dangerous country conditions. Designating TPS and SSR for Mali not only serves the U.S. interests by meeting the above-stated foreign policy commitments, but also creates opportunities for Malian nationals to continue contributing to the U.S. economy and to their communities. Furthermore, the designation of TPS for Mali is not contrary to the national interest of the United States, therefore meeting all the statutory requirements for a designation.

Conclusion

We strongly urge the Secretary and his counterparts in the administration to take necessary measures to protect Malian nationals in the United States and provide an initial 18-month designation of TPS for Mali. In addition, we request that the designation is accompanied with SSR benefits, a Timely Federal Register Notice (FRN), a 180-day registration period and a culturally relevant outreach campaign to the impacted community.

It is essential that equity be front and center in the review of a designation decision of TPS Mali. All nationals of countries whose conditions meet the requirements of a designation, including Black- and Brown-majority countries in the Global South, should be provided the protection they need in the form of TPS. Designating TPS and providing SSR benefits for Malian nationals would also advance the administration's goal of addressing disparities in humanitarian treatment toward Black and Brown majority countries in the Global South. The recent designation for Cameroon took years of advocacy led by affected community members, while review and designation decisions for Ukraine took just six days.⁴⁰ Others, like Burkina Faso, Democratic Republic of Congo, Mauritania and Ethiopia, are still awaiting review and decisions. The Biden administration must prioritize equity in the consideration of TPS for Mali and all countries whose conditions meet TPS requirements, regardless of their racial makeup.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

National

American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA)
1331 G Street, NW, Suite 300

Dear American Immigration Lawyers Association:

Thank you for your August 15, 2022 letter to the U.S. Department of Homeland Security requesting an 18-month designation of Temporary Protected Status (TPS) for Mali as well as Special Student Relief (SSR) benefits for Malian students. U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) is principally responsible for advising the Secretary on TPS issues and implementing the programs. Secretary Mayorkas asked that I respond on his behalf.

I appreciate the information you have provided on country conditions in Mali. DHS is monitoring conditions in the country and is committed to administering its programs, including TPS, in a fair, consistent, and equitable manner. On his first day in office, President Biden affirmed his Administration's belief that "advancing equity, civil rights, racial justice, and equal opportunity is the responsibility of the whole of our Government" through his Executive Order on Advancing Racial Equity and Support for Underserved Communities Through the Federal Government (EO 13985).¹ DHS is committed to supporting the implementation of this important directive and has undertaken significant efforts to address the important issues raised in your letter and to ensuring equitable consideration of all countries being reviewed for TPS designation. DHS makes decisions to designate TPS after consultation with interagency partners and careful consideration of the circumstances of the country.

I further appreciate the concerns you have outlined regarding the situation in Mali and your interest in its designation for TPS as well as SSR. Please be assured that DHS offers support that may be available upon request to assist eligible Malian nationals (or individuals without nationality who last habitually resided in Mali) residing in the United States who have been affected by these conditions, including:

- Change or extension of nonimmigrant status if eligible nationals are currently in the United States, even if the request is filed after the authorized period of admission has expired;
- Expedited processing of requests for travel authorization documents;

- Expedited adjudication of requests for off-campus employment authorization for F-1 students experiencing severe economic hardship;
- Expedited adjudication of employment authorization document applications, where appropriate;
- Assistance if applicants received a Request for Evidence or a Notice of Intent to Deny and were unable to appear for an interview, submit evidence, or respond in a timely manner because of the pandemic; and,
- Replacement of lost or damaged immigration or travel documents issued by USCIS, such as a Permanent Resident Card (Green Card).

Thank you again for your letter and interest in this important issue. Please share this response with the other organizations that cosigned your letter. Should you wish to discuss this matter further, please do not hesitate to contact the USCIS Office of Public Engagement by email at public.engagement@uscis.dhs.gov.

Sincerely,
